CHAPPED HANDS, FACE AND LIPS MAY BE PREVENTED BY APPLYING

MARSH-MELLOW LOTION

A delightful, softening liquid cream that is quickly absorbed by the skin. In a high and dry climate like Albuquerque's, where the skin chaps and cracks so readily, Marsh-Mellow Lotion is a necessity after washing the face or hands. Not sticky—it may be used as often as one pleases throughout the day without the slightest inconvenience.

DEATH CHEATS CHONG LI OF HIS HOME-GOING

Chong Li, Albuquerque's pioneer Chinese laundryman, died last night. Nobody knows how old he was, nor even the members of the Chinese colony, but he lived here for thirty-five years, so he was probably well along in years.

Chong was proprietor of the Chong

Li laundry on South Second street. He was known and liked by a great many Albuquerqueans who called him "John." It was the only name by which most of them knew him.

Death cheated Chong of his desire to go to his post as he was about to attain it. For years he had been saving to put in a competence and retire in a life of ease in Canton, his native city. A short time ago he had sold off his worldly goods and found the prospects good. As such things go in China, he was a wealthy man.

He decided that the time to go back home and enjoy his money, and maybe get to be a mandarin of the fourth rank had come. A week ago he completed all his plans for the home-going. His ticket was bought and it only remained to say the last good-byes and start.

But the good-byes were never to be said. Death stepped between the old man and his return home. A stroke of paralysis came upon him, and last night Chong went on a longer journey than any he had ever made.

Death is cruel in the Chinese colony over Chong's passing. The other Orientals understand his longing to return to the receding city on the Yangtze better than any white man can, and they had rejoiced with him over the approaching trip.

"Poor Chong," said one of the colonists this morning.

Well, said the American friend to whom he spoke, "he was a good man. He went to Heaven."

"Hah!" snorted the Chinese. It was plain that he regarded the idea ridiculous. There was no comfort for the hearer in any such thought.

He gone, said the Chinese. "And he goes to Canton."

There was the case of Chong Li as he saw it. And so he mourned without comfort for the kindly old man.

Truly enough he was a kindly old soul. Thrifty, but not parsimonious. It was his habit, for instance, to fit his parents with round pea nuts on the Chinese New Year's day and go about the streets giving sweets and goodie to his children. In many ways he showed his kindness and good nature. There are many others besides the Chinese here who will be sorry to hear "John" has gone.

The Chinese colony will do the best it can for Chong now. His body will be shipped to strong box to Canton so that he will rest among his ancestors and be properly worshipped by the great clan of Li.
